PTCE Exam Preparation and Practice Questions

As the German banks put more security into so online banking procedures, the gem security provider has released a device that says that it makes the transactions easier to complete. a user and then used to calculate a unique password, said eckardt mohr, sales manager of electronic banking solutions for Germany. German banks have made complex security measures to reduce online banking fraud. German banks began to strengthen their online security by issuing to so customers a list of sos (numbers of transaction authentication.) that are random digits requested to a bank client during an online transaction. such a password is unique, when the banks began to hear them, they would request any tanning from the list to complete the transaction, but finally changed that routine to request a specific tan, called as or itan indexed, from the list as an additional security measure. another variation used by banks is to issue mtan, or access codes sent to a person's mobile phone. other banks in the ee. uu. and europa have different implementations using unique passwords, including the issue of so customers a token that generates a password, which is a sequence of numbers that is only good for a short period of time. in europa, some banks issue card readers that verify a microchip present on a payment card, a feature that is not heard on the ee. uu payment cards to generate the unique password. also and took it a step further. some now require users to enter bits of transaction data in the unique password generator to create the code, which should then be entered into the banking web application. but the system takes a lot of time and frustrating for customers, said mohrmust take the additional step of entering the requested transactionin the password generator at once, then take that number and re-enter the bank web application. Gemalto Ezio Optical Reader will automatically read the information of transaction necessary to create the the only one when it is kept close to two to three centimeters from the PC screen. Mohr said. The device also authentic the person's payment card. Gemalto says that the reader will fit in a wallet along with a person's cards. It is 0.4 cm thick, weighs 22 grams and measures 79 x 57 mm. Mohr said Gemalto now approaches German banks to see if they are interested in the product. It will depend on banks to decide whether they want to charge customers for the device or, as in the case of other tokens and card readers, provide it for free.
